SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 12.

The New Catholic University.

Right Reverend John J. Keane, Bishop of Richmond, and rector of the Catholic University of America, has been in Philadelphia since Monday last soliciting contributions for the new university. He has so far met with remarkable success, the subscriptions already amounting to nearly eighty thousand dollars. Bishop Keane will continue to work during next week, and then return to Washington to attend the final arrangements for the laying of the corner-stone of the University building on Thursday, May 24th. Meanwhile a numerous force of workmen, under the direction of the architect, Mr. E. F. Baldwin, are pushing on the construction of the building with all possible rapidity. The erection of the cellar story is nearly completed, the joists of the entire lower floor will be in by the 24th, and a solid floor laid on them for the occasion will give a grand stand 265 feet long and about 50 feet wide, on which seats will be provided for 1,500 specially invited guests, the whole to be covered with a canvas awning, forming an immense tent superbly adorned with American and Papal flags. Cardinal Gibbons has already received assurance from more than twenty Archbishops and Bishops that they will be present, and a very large number of distinguished men from every part of the country have sent their acceptance of the invitation. The occasion promises to be one of the most notable in the history of the church in this country.

How to become learned.—Any man of mature years who has enjoyed all the advantages of a free public primary, grammar and high school, a preparatory academy, a college, and a professional school, will testify that what he has learned by himself is of infinitely more value to him than all he ever acquired in all the institutions of learning he ever attended. Books on all subjects are now so cheap and plenty, public libraries are so large and numerous, instruction in special studies is so easily obtained that any person who can read, write and compute numbers may become as learned as the wisest. He can study what he knows or thinks will afford him the most pleasure or profit. He can cultivate his head, hands, or heart, his eye, tongue or ear, his manners, morals and language to any extent he desires, at an expense not exceeding what a young man ordinarily spends for cigars or a girl for candy. If a person wishes to become learned there is little trouble in accomplishing what he wishes, and to be illiterate in these days is a "voluntary misfortune" indeed.
